A HALF-CENTURY OF MICHIGAN MEMORIES...AND SOME THOUGHTS ABOUT ITS FUTURE

Jim and Anne Duderstadt

Jim and Anne Duderstadt

For the past 50 years the Duderstadts have served the University in many ways as partners in faculty activities, leadership roles, community building, and historians. (Jim was UM President, and Anne “First-Lady,” 1988-1996.) In this discussion they will draw upon these past experiences to explore some of the challenges the University will face in the future.

MACROECONOMIC PROSPECTS FOR THE US AND THE GLOBE

Dr. Kathryn M. E. Dominguez

Kathryn M. E. Dominguez

After an unusually slow recovery from the global recession in 2008, macroeconomic conditions in the U.S. have improved markedly over the past few years. Economic growth has also improved in other countries, though the pace of that expansion has become increasingly uneven, and prospects for future growth have become increasingly uncertain. The lecture will consider how escalating trade tensions and policy shifts in the U.S. are likely to impact U.S. and global growth going forward.

Kathryn Dominguez is Professor of Public Policy and Economics in the Ford School of Public Policy at the University of Michigan, and is Research Associate at the National Bureau of Economic Research. She also teaches in UM’s Department of Economics, serving as Director of the Honors Program. She received her Ph.D. in economics from Yale University, and taught at Harvard before joining the Michigan faculty in 1997. She currently serves on the panel of economic advisors at the Congressional Budget Office, and has previously served on advisory panels at the Federal Reserve Banks of Chicago and Cleveland, and as a research advisor for the Bank for International Settlements.

DEMOCRACY, DICTATORSHIP, AND DEVELOPMENT: IN WHAT WAYS DOES THE TYPE OF POLITICAL REGIME MATTER?

Dr. Jonathan Hanson

Jonathan Hanson

This presentation discusses research on the relationship between political regime type (e.g. democracy or dictatorship) and development, as measured by economic growth and improvement in health or education outcomes. Although wealthier countries are more likely to be democratic than low-income countries, the reasons for this correlation are a matter of debate. Additionally, the range of economic outcomes appears to be much wider among non-democracies than democracies. Why? Jonathan Hanson is a lecturer in statistics for public policy at the Ford School. As a specialist in comparative political economy and political development, he examines the ways in which, and the channels through which, political institutions affect economic performance and human development. In his recent projects, he has explored whether democracy and state capacity complement or substitute for each other when it comes to improving human development, why authoritarian regimes vary significantly in economic and social outcomes, how the spatial distribution of ethnic group populations interacts with political institutions to affect the supply of public services, and how to measure state capacity. Hanson holds an MA in economics and a Ph.D. in political science from the University of Michigan.

THE FALL AND RISE OF INCOME INEQUALITY IN THE UNITED STATES

Professor Charles L. Ballard

Charles Ballard

Income inequality in the United States decreased dramatically between 1928 and 1944. This “Great Convergence” was driven primarily by changes in public policies. Many of these relatively egalitarian policies were reduced or reversed in the 1970s and 1980s.

Largely as a result of these policy reversals, income inequality has increased dramatically during the “Great Divergence” of the last 40 years. Professor Ballard will discuss the economics and politics behind these changes. Charles L. Ballard is an author and award-winning Professor of Economics at Michigan State University. He has been a consultant to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, the U.S. Department of Agriculture, and numerous other government agencies and research institutions, both in the United States and abroad. He has received a number of National Science Foundation grants and outstanding teaching awards.

THE CONSTITUTION AT THE BORDER: WHEN IMMIGRATION POLICY AND CONSTITUTIONAL NORMS CLASH

Professor Margo Schlanger

Margo Schlanger

This presentation will examine some current controversies relating to immigration, border enforcement, and the Constitution. Margo Schlanger is the Wade H. and Dores M. McCree Collegiate Professor of Law at the University of Michigan, where she has taught since 2009. She teaches constitutional law, torts, and classes relating to civil rights and to prisons. She also founded and runs the Civil Rights Litigation Clearinghouse. Professor Schlanger earned her J.D. from Yale in 1993. She then served as law clerk for Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg of the U.S. Supreme Court from 1993 to 1995. From 1995 to 1998, she was a trial attorney in the U.S. Department of Justice Civil Rights Division, where she worked to remedy civil rights abuses by prisons and police departments, and earned two Division Special Achievement awards. Professor Schlanger is a leading authority on civil rights issues and civil and criminal detention. In addition to her research and writing, Professor Schlanger does substantial work in civil rights litigation and prison and immigration reform. She has been appointed class counsel in Hamama v. Adducci, a national class action to ensure due process for Iraqi nationals whom the Trump Administration seeks to deport. She is the court-appointed monitor for a statewide settlement dealing with deaf prisoners in Kentucky. She took a two-year leave from the University in 2010 and 2011, serving as the presidentially appointed Officer for Civil Rights and Civil Liberties at the U.S. Department of Homeland Security. As the head of Civil Rights and Civil Liberties for DHS, she was the Secretary’s lead advisor on civil rights and civil liberties issues. She also served on the Department of Homeland Security’s Advisory Committee on Family Residential Centers, which recommended abolishing family detention.
